Continuation of 11. does NOT place the application in condition for allowance because: Applicant argues that prior art fails to teach that use tax is based on the location of the consumer. However, examiner disagrees. As disclosed in the rejection, Col. 7, lines 1-36 of Chong showsthe generation of a tax report where once the report parameters are set (e.g., date range), the sales records are sorted by location codes for each of the states in which the company is required to report sales tax collections. In this case, used tax being based on the location of the consumer is suggested since in order for sales tax collections to be reported, the sales records are first sorted by location. Applicant also further argues that prior art does not teach the transmission of tax data directly to the government taxing authority. However, examiner disagrees. Cretzler teaches that the total amount of the transaction is first sent to the merchant bank, however, taxes alone are sent to the taxing authority, and Cretzler therefore teaches the transmission of tax data directly to the governmental taxing authority. In addition, applicant argues that prior art does not teach a purchase being made over the Internet. However, Bloomberg suggests this feature since Bloomberg teaches that the transaction information may be stored on-line as the information is entered by the clerk making the sale. Since this transaction information is being stored on-line during the sales process, and a purchase is part of a transaction in Bloomberg, it is therefore suggested that part of the purchase process is being done on-line.
